How does Marlow's inner perspective come into dialog with the darkness along his journey? Can we look beyond his perspective of the darkness?

Begin here:

1.2 | Jack's Intro

- This asks two questions. What does Marlow's language reveal to us about his journey and how, ultimately, does his internalities reveals

1.3 | WWE

Two stances: Marlow Brings Darkness, or Darkness Darkens Marlow

1.3.1 | Ryan's Opening

- To see beyond

both! It's a greesy cycle.

- "The earth seemed unearthly" quote. It seems like he is describing Earth as he sees it, but how much of it is Marlow thinking its dark and how much of it is actually dark
- Initially, so... We only get Marlow's perspective, so we could only get his perpersctev of the darkness, so there is no way to prove his counter-argument
- Then realized that, if there were to be an example, a place to show the objective example of the darkness, we could get another perspective potentially through convos he has with other people to pick up on things that they have said
- Perhaps have a scene with the cannibals —
- Comparing normal features of the land as hell — 43
